Making Strides in Computer Service

I often hear small business owners ask where they can get technical help, particularly when it comes to reliable computer services. Pilgrim, your search has ended.

There is a local non-profit organization that just may be the answer to many a small business owner's (and individual's) dilemma.

ReliaTech is a customer-focused computer service business providing professional technology support to individuals, small businesses and non-profits.

They not only offer technological services to consumers they are also the nonprofit social enterprise of The Stride Center (formerly Street Tech).

The Stride Center is an innovative non-profit organization that since 1999 has prepared individuals for successful and meaningful careers as computer technicians. The Stride Center is committed to bridging the "digital divide" by offering an advanced technology and professional development training program to at-risk and disadvantaged adults. This mission and the fact that the digital revolution is unquestionably here provides the potential of a new life for students, enabling them to achieve success despite social and economic barriers.

In a highly professional and nurturing environment, The Stride Center trains participants in state-of-the-art computer skills, then guides graduates into desirable technology careers.

Once these students have graduated, their skills and knowledge are put to use in many local business enterprises. But this non-profit goes further. Students who have nearly completed their studies have an opportunity to work in paid internships at ReliaTech (www.ReliaTech.org), the Stride Center's social enterprise, where they refurbish computers for the Gold Star line of certified renewed computers. And some students of the Stride Center go to work in permanent jobs as computer support technicians at ReliaTech.

Since 2004, ReliaTech has helped hundreds of local residents and small businesses with computer and network problems. ReliaTech also sells a line of refurbished computers, late model systems taken out of service in local corporations.

These systems go through a rigorous 18-point check and are cleaned and brought up to nearly new standards. The systems are given the Gold Star Certified Renewed computer label and sold for as little as $100 in ReliaTech's San Pablo store. They can also pick up your computer at your home, office, or workspace, fix it and return it ready to go!
